

Excerpt from Thoughts on Population and the Means of Comfortable Subsistence: With Suggestions Regarding an Increased Supply and Lessened Cost of Food for Childhood and the Industrial Classes The branch Economical Science which forms the subject of the following suggestions, is one on which the members of the Upper Classes are but little accustomed to reflect. It may, indeed, be readily conceded, that, in comparison with mental and moral improvement, the supply of physical wants should occupy a subordinate place; it has, however, its own peculiar value and importance, and is entitled to more attention than is generally bestowed on it. In public usefulness, two excellent noblemen of the present day - Lord Brougham and the Earl of Shaftesbury - occupy the foremost rank. Their efforts, in somewhat different roads, but all tending to the same goal - the promotion of knowledge consecrated to the pursuit of virtue and happiness - have been directed with unwearied zeal, and produced blessed results in much diminished ignorance and crime.
