

Love-Lust-Kink #6 Book 1. The Sex Kingdom

Sex, for women, generally involves an emotional investment. Sex for men, can be as superficial as masturbating, just getting off. Everything comes down to sex. Wise old hillbilly from Arkansas, Slick Willie

The general sciences of biology and ethnology (the study of people), #572-574 at the library, assume that we got here by evolution from tiny one-celled asexual amoeba that gradually developed and evolved into sexes because of the need for mutations in the genetic soup of life which would further propel evolution to a higher species through natural selection, that the organisms who had the best, most superior mutations would adapt to their environments better and thrive while the others would die off. First it was transgenics, asexual mitosis which was one asexual cell splitting in two with no exchange of DNA with anything else then over time, because of the radiation from the sun which created genetic anomalies, these one-celled organisms evolved to sexual meiosis where they could contribute half of their DNA to another cell who would do the same and together create a wholly new organism with a DNA profile different from its two contributors (parents)) thus cells could now mix their DNA up with other cells to vary the gene pool. Sex is the means for genetic recombination, in fact, that is the pure function of sex, genetic recombination, that's why we do it from a scientific point of view, to vary the gene pool. Symbiogenesis is the process of different creatures coming together to share their DNA such that together, they form a much stronger and more adaptable creature than they formerly were by themselves. By having two sexes, this assures constantly shifting different genetic make-ups which is good for the animal kingdom, that different animals and people interact sexually to have new babies which assures new and better combinations while the inferior ones die out which is the process of evolution. Roughly less than 3% of the animal kingdom are monogamous thus ensuring that the strongest males pass their seed on to many females as they make their rounds defeating lesser males in their quests to breed although the females help out too by looking for different males to procreate with. Some birds are monogamous presumably because it takes so much effort to raise baby birds that nature has programmed males to stay and help out with the process, often helping with the building the nest and bringing food in to help out. Evolution or God seems to have programmed us into two distinct irrational passionate sexes in order for us to be attracted to each other and transfer our genes into as many different combinations as possible in the hope that the superior offspring will keep on combining with other superior offspring who will get stronger and more adaptable while the weaker ones will die out. To read about all the many ways humans and animals have evolved their sexuality, just read any of Desmond Morses books like The Naked Ape or Manwatching. Some of Darwins old books were good like The Descent of Man, and Selection in Relation to Sex. The stronger males are naturally polygamous or just cavalier who strive to pass their seed onto as many females as possible and kill off any young males they come across who want to challenge them. Someday when they get old, they will be killed off by a strong young alpha male who will have strong seed from a former alpha male possibly the one hes killing off, his father, such is the general nature of the male in most animal species. Despite our intelligence and the presumption that having children is hard work, we, the males in the human race are still prisoners to cultural evolution, having children and raising families because this is the way we were raised to be in order to find fulfillment in our lives.
