

Stand!

Controversy surrounding global climate change, environmental fanaticism, and political intrigue in a university setting make Stand! thrilling, relevant, current, informative, and alive. Wes Carlyle, a chaired professor of environmental science, and Karen Sterling, his attractive young research collaborator and graduate student, face off with a corrupt university president and a depraved dean. They conspire and attempt to force Wes to use his influence to convince Karen not to make a public issue of the president's misconduct which should have led to his removal from office and possibly his imprisonment. The dean threatens to bring charges against Wes in the faculty senate for carrying on an illicit affair with Karen if he refuses to cooperate.

The allegation is a lie, but if convicted, Wes would lose his job. Infuriated by the threat, Wes turns the table on the dean, sets a trap, and exposes his scheme. With unswerving support from Virginia Wilson, Wes' former student and the university's newly elected board chair, Wes and Karen help to oust the president and the dean, thus bringing to a close an unsavory chapter in the university's otherwise proud history. Virginia becomes the university's new president, and Wes and Karen focus their energy and attention on promoting their research. Their findings provoke controversy because they challenge the global warming theory championed by the United Nations, political power seekers, a host of Hollywood celebrities, and environmental fanatics. Wes and Karen encounter hostility and Karen is physically attacked by a radical environmental terrorist at a meeting of environmental scientists in Atlanta. Detective Mike McDaniel from the Atlanta Police Department investigates and discovers that a faculty member in Wes' department orchestrated the assault as payback for the role Wes and Karen played in helping to remove the president and the dean from their jobs. The detective suspects that the ousted dean also played a part in the attack. In the book, there are two interviews on The Neal Boortz Show where Wes and Karen lay out facts that refute the theory that man-made CO2 emissions are responsible for global warming. The interviews, although fictitious, are loaded with verifiable factual information about a natural cyclical changes in climate. Some of the information will stun people who know only what they read or see in the mainstream media about global climate change.
