

Three Tracts on the Corn-Trade and Corn-Laws (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Three Tracts on the Corn-Trade and Corn-Laws The publishing the Essay in 1758, and writing the Considerations in 1759, though the last was then communicated only to a few, were the occasion of many papers relative to Corn, being communicated to the Author, which he had never heard of before; and those as they in general tended to confirm and strengthen many of the facts and observations contained in the said Works, induced him to procure as many more as possible, and by these means he became possessed of what appeared to him a valuable Collection, in that it proved from facts the great propriety and utility of, and benefits that have arisen from our Corn-laws which are not the work of a day, but were framed by flow degrees and are founded on an experience of upwards of two hundred years, which elapsed while they were bringing to their present state, viz. from 1534, 35 H. 8. to 1738, II G. 2. since when they have not been altered although they have had some temporary suspensions.
