

A synopsis of the book, "Ook Ook Monkey" would be in summary, a detailed account of a juvenile fiction story of the bad karma of a promise; on behalf, of the ape who tries diligently to get a bunch of bananas from the tree, but he cannot because of mental physical limitations so he then relies upon the animals, as they pass him by, to reach out for their help to retrieve the bunch of bananas hanging from the tree. Each animal that tries to help the ape to get the bunch of bananas from the tree are given the promise that if they could get the bundle of bananas down from the tree for him that he would forever be in their debt and what ever they asked for from him that he would give to him. This book has a bazaar ending, of a twist, where it teaches the lesson of be careful of the promises that you make, because in the end you may not always get exactly what you made the promise for .The motivation for composing, this work was direct involvement and curiosity that my grandson had in the story, as I told the story as a bedtime story to him. This book can be classified as fiction with the market appeal envisions for children story readers.
